New Work for Dole Scheme in Lyons June 6, 2014 Continued from front page.

...Federal Lyons MP Eric Hutchinson said today that 18 to 30 year olds in North and North-West Tasmania who have been unemployed for 12 months or longer and receiving Newstart and/or Youth Allowance will be required to Work for the Dole from the start of the next financial year. Those centres in the Lyons electorate selected as part of the North and North-West Tasmania region include Port Sorell, Sheffield, Lorinna and Cradle Mountain in the North-West, and stretch from St Helens to Poatina and Ross in the North. Mr Hutchinson said that from July 1 this year, participants will complete about 15 hours a week for six months in a work-like environment.

"The Government's reinvigorated Work for the Dole program will give all participants the chance to have a go," Mr Hutchinson said. "The Federal Government firmly believes that all Australians capable of working should be working. They should be earning, learning or Working for the Dole. Work for the Dole is an important part of the Government's plan to help young job seekers gain the skills and experience they need to move from welfare to work, and make a positive contribution to their local community. It keeps job seekers engaged and active and helps avoid a lifetime of welfare dependency."

Mr Hutchinson said that the Government would appoint a Work for the Dole coordinator for North and North-West Tasmania with tenders to be called this week.

"These coordinators will have the vital, on-the-ground task of identifying local organisations willing to host a Work for the Dole place and connecting those organisations with employment service providers across the area," Mr Hutchinson said. Work for the Dole places will be sourced in not-for-profit organisations, local councils and federal and state government agencies.

The first 18 selected areas for Work for the Dole announced this week make up the first phase of the new program which will be rolled out in full nationally from July 1, next year. These locations were selected from around Australia because of their high unemployment, high numbers of young job seekers and because the local communities will significantly benefit from Work for the Dole.

Tasmania Police is cracking down on those involved with illegal firearms as part of Operation Unification – Illegal Guns Off Our Streets which starts June 16. The two week operation is part of an Australia-wide campaign and aims to get stolen and illegally imported, manufactured and used firearms out of circulation.

Information from the public will be a key to the operation's success.

"We've had good success in recent years in locating and destroying illegal firearms," said Tasmania Police Detective Senior Sergeant Craig Joel. "There are people in Tasmania involved with illegal firearms and we're asking for information from the community to help us identify and arrest them. Information about who has illegal firearms, how they are getting them, where they are being stored and what they are being used for could assist our ongoing investigations."

So far this year 54 firearms have been stolen in Tasmania; 23 have been recovered. Each year Tasmania Police destroys about 1400 firearms, including handguns, rifles, shot guns and semi-automatic weapons. Destroying them helps prevent their use in further criminal activity.

There is a permanent amnesty for handing in firearms. Under the Firearms Act 1996, any firearm can be handed into a police station and no further action will be taken in relation to possession offences. Special amnesty days will be held throughout Operation Unification at Launceston Police Station on June 19 and Sorell Police Station on June 21. The mobile police station bus will be used in the North-West of the state.

As a result of last year's Operation Unification, 33 illegal firearms were seized and 17 people were charged with firearms offences. To minimise the risk of legal firearms making their way on to the illegal market Tasmania Police regularly makes inspections of the storage facilities of licence holders.

Detective Senior Sgt Joel added: "Nearly all illegally possessed firearms were once legal because they were either stolen or never registered. "The amnesties support our criminal investigations, helping to get unwanted and illegally acquired firearms out of circulation. We conduct about 3000 premises checks on firearm licence holders each year to ensure they are storing their firearms correctly in a secure weapons safe. Firearms stored incorrectly are not only a safety risk to those in the house, they are at risk of ending up in criminal hands and being sold on or used in robberies and other violent crimes."

Anyone who has information about those involved with illegal firearms is asked to call Crime Stoppers on 1800 333 000. Operation Unification ends on June 29. Amnesty Days will be held throughout Operation Unification as follows:

- > Thursday 19 June (10am-2pm) Launceston Police Station
- > Saturday 21 June (10am-2pm) Sorell Police Station
- > Sunday 29 June (9am-1pm) Sheffield (mobile police station bus)
- > Sunday 6 July (9am-midday) Queenstown (mobile police station bus)
- > Sunday 6 July (1pm-4pm) Strahan (mobile police station bus)
- > Sunday 13 July (9am-midday) Rosebery (mobile police station bus)
- > Sunday 13 July (1pm-4pm) Zeehan (mobile police station bus)
- > Sunday 20 July (9am-3pm) Smithton (mobile police station bus)

The Say...by Cagerattler

I'm probably completely naïve on economics but I was extremely dismayed to read recently that the current state government is all for public sector cutbacks again. What I'm not naïve on is that most politicians are very loose with the truth when it suits them.

Apparently, whilst in opposition, the current mob were not made aware of just how dire our state budget situation was, and laid the blame on the former mob saying they didn't shed the jobs they promised. Now apparently, they may find it necessary to cut up to 1700 more public sector jobs over the forward estimates (some other figure mentioned was 2200 or so). What gives?

I know what gives, and a couple of my friends concur. If this government does end up shedding these jobs and thereby consigning many of these relatively low paid workers to the long term unemployment lines (many to the scrap heap), I hope it is done primarily by way of natural attrition and that they allow for the fact that if the person is young enough to be re-trained into another non public sector job, they will be given that opportunity.

When it comes to most of us, jobs and health are the two main things to face life confidently with. The new Federal Government have an agenda to return Australia to a surplus - a similar situation and using similar reasons (dare I say excuses) - to the state government, blaming the former lot for all our woes.

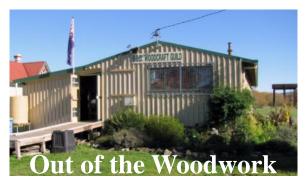

Just about every other country on this spinning blue globe of ours would kill for our economy, and most if not all economists have lauded the former government for the way they handled the GFC. That so claimed 'inept' government also tried to implement a Carbon Tax that would help make us take the first steps in accepting responsibility for our pollution; the Mining Tax which will be dismantled over time (similar to the Carbon Tax) had flaws, but carried the intention of making the companies that prosper from our natural mineral wealth pay more for the right to drag these precious minerals from our ground...

I'd have much more respect for both federal and state governments if they'd try to improve the recently set up taxing situations, rather than scrapping them out of hand as they have or will try to.

I fear for this country in the next three to five years. We're losing industries, sending more people to the unemployment lines and we're still dabbling in things we need not be...all for a surplus. I'd love to have some economic wizard explain our absolute need to have this Holy Grail surplus that may be detrimental to so many Australians now, particularly if you're a public sector worker and an easy target. Maybe the key advisors to all our state and federal politicians would be best served to get these pollies to take a step back and be a lot more long-sighted in handling the "dire economic crisis" they claim we have (despite most independent experts saying otherwise)

Like I say...loose with the truth perhaps...Maybe we should all move to 'Canadia' or something ...

What do you think? Rod McGiveron

GUILDS HOME HINT

Ointments, hair gels and polishes contain beeswax and other resins. Simply rub these stains with tea tree oil on your fingers, then wash and dry normally. In the case of carpet, rub tea tree oil sparingly with your fingers over the area, then sponge with a damp cloth that has been dipped in cold water and tightly wrung out.

DONATED BREAD

It has been put about that I have said food donated by Coles and Banjos is not fit for human consumption.

This is not true

The fact is all food distribution needs to comply with government health standards.

Some foods like meat and dairy products need to be transported and stored according to those standards. When they are not, they will be disposed of to ensure the health and safety of this community. Bread products do not have those strict standards. I am glad that we are able to provide these bread products to people in need, and this will continue.

SECOND BITE

I started Second Bite with the intention of helping low income families access fruit and vegetables.

This will continue each Wednesday. I am happy that the people in need within our catchment area are taking full advantage of this programme.

THE DRUG AND ALCOHOL EDUCATION PROGRAM

I started this initiative in response to community concerns.

The last meeting on May 20th had educators from Hobart and Launceston taking part.

The roll-up from St Marys was heartening and their interest was noteworthy.

This is an ongoing program and we hope that more people from Mathinna, Fingal and Avoca find the time to attend.

The minutes of the May meeting are available on request at the Fingal Online Centre.

The next Fingal Valley Neighbourhood House committee meeting will be held at the St Marys Hotel on Wednesday 25th June 2014, 7pm. Those interested are welcome to attend and participation is encouraged.

Regards

John Vincent, President FVNH

Some thoughts by Mel Norton

Last week, I experienced something rare and beautiful.

Humility.

That's not a word we hear very often. And I suspect if we were to do a 'Vox Pop', we would find that it's not even a word that people could easily define.

Before I tell you the story which so blessed me with its simplicity and lack of pride, let me paint a background.

When my boys were very young, I was keen to teach them about what it meant to be humble, to aim for true humility, to despise arrogance, pride, cockiness and a constant focus on self.

This was not easy...indeed it was a challenge to model and a challenge to teach, because the world demands that 'it's all about me'.

Many children thrive on competition and the lie that they have to be better, stronger, fitter, taller, smarter even, if they are to succeed in life. And no matter what parents at home may try to instil in their children, the impact of peer groups cannot be underestimated.

So my boys and I had many laughs as we stumbled together along the way of learning some life lessons about how we relate to others. My mantra to them was always, "As soon as you talk about how humble you are, then you can be sure you're not!"

As time passed, and they grew up and away from wanting anything to do with mum's 'advice', I lost confidence in believing that I had made any inroads into their understanding of humility.

Then something happened which I'll remember for ever. I was in the car with one of my boys and we had the radio on, listening to an interview with a man about his life and he was describing how he was 'extremely humble'.

At that moment, there was silence in the car, and indeed on the radio airwaves.

Then my son, with great excitement, said, 'Mum, Mum, did you hear that? That man was just telling everyone out here in radio land, how humble he is...so I guess he isn't!"

Needless to say, I smiled with quiet joy at the revelation which seemed to have taken root in this young child's mind. He had finally 'got it'. At that moment, I couldn't have been happier.

And so to my rare and beautiful experience last week.

A mother was sharing with me an incident where her son had corrected her about a particular social gaffe he believed she had made. He thought she owed someone an apology.

She thought about it and agreed that she did. She made the apology and was thrilled to find it was received with graciousness. She went on to say, without a hint of pride, that she was equally thrilled to realise that she could learn from her children and that her life was a continuum of learning. She was grateful to her son for his courage and display of love in wanting to be a part of his mum's personal growth.

This mother's display of genuine humility was a priceless gift to me.

When we let go of our ego and selfish pride, something beautiful happens.

Nothing equates to that.

ARTS/CRAFTS

News from The Suncoast Gallery 27b Quail St St Helens.

We are delighted to promote the works of Peg Smith, pictured, as our Artist of the Month until mid July.

Peg (Margaret) is a watercolour artist and teacher. Over 18 years have been spent learning her creative talent which she never tires of. It takes her outdoors where landscapes are captured through endurance and patience.

Peg paints lovely sea views and being a born Tasmanian does not want to live anywhere else. Through hours of painting, this passion culminates into awe-inspiring impressions. Peg has had many exhibitions throughout the state and has acquired various techniques through workshops and pure experimentation with the movement of paint on paper.

Early light can be breathtaking as can wintry misty scenes, where Peg snuggles into warmer clothing to weather the storms as nothing escapes her paintbrush.

"I continue to learn, change and refine my style and add to my repertoire of painting. I look forward to many more years of creating mood and feeling through watercolour landscape painting, and hope my love of this medium can provide joy and inspiration for others," said Peg.

Absence makes the heart grow fonder...

The back bar of the New Brunswick Hotel is an all-male drinking place. Not that women are barred; it would take a brave publican to do that and would probably be illegal, but women just don't like to go there. It is cramped, poorly lit, and cheaply furnished. The walls are dark brown dado panelling topped with a bilious green gloss enamel, the only decoration a fly-specked print of dogs playing poker. There are small round tables surrounded by brown vinyl-covered chairs which look comfortable but they're not, so most patrons elect to stand at the bar.

It's not the décor, though, that explains its unpopularity with the female sex and its attraction to a small but devoted number of males, but its almost complete silence. Women find the atmosphere oppressive, men say it's the only place they can find to have a quiet drink after work. The publican knows what drinks are favoured by his customers and dispenses them without comment or conversation. The regulars, most of whom know each other by sight but rarely by name, occasionally indulge in dialogue, but this never extends beyond a brief exchange of platitudes. Any topic more controversial than the weather is frowned upon.

Which is why Henry Morris was taken aback when Allan Foyle, a regular who knew the unspoken rules as well as anyone, engaged him in conversation and launched into a detailed description of his current girlfriend.

'I know you're not really interested in my private life...' Foyle began. You're right there, thought Henry.

'But I have to tell someone, and it's not the sort of thing you can discuss at the office.' Or the back bar of the New Brunswick, thought Henry, looking around for some means of escape.

Foyle sensed he was losing his audience. 'I'll get straight to the point,' he said. 'She glows in the dark.'

'She what?' Henry was intrigued now, despite himself.

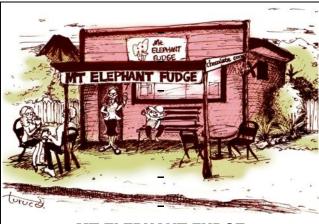

'Lights up. After three of four glasses of champagne she takes on a sort of blue-green fluorescent sheen. All over. It only lasts a minute but it's really quite something to behold. Have you ever heard of anything like it?'

'Strangely enough,' said Henry, 'I have. It's a rare phenomenon but not unheard of. You're plying the young lady with the wrong tipple, though, if you want the effect to last beyond a few moments.'
'You mean...?'

'Yes. Champagne may be all very well, but absinthe makes the tart glow longer.'

Robespierre Just another mystery of life? Part 2.

...So, 0900hrs and Pyke's tourist coach is travelling out of Sydney on the Parramatta road, headed for the Blue Mountains. There really isn't any width problem with this old road generally, only in the heavily built-up sections. The worst of these is close to the city, and known amongst heavy vehicle drivers as the Butcher's Picnic. So - the usual heavy traffic in both directions. Kerbside lane is fairly full with parked vehicles. I'm concentrating on keeping the coach within my lane with no room to spare and a truck coming up alongside on the outside lane. Traffic packed thick travelling in the opposite direction.

Between parked vehicles I notice a man starting to edge his way along the side of his van to get to the driver's door. Travelling at about 50 kms per hour I scan way up in front, truck now right alongside (and on its limit with road centre line). I'm very apprehensive. This will be close!! The horn is useless as the pedestrian already knows I'm coming. Edge out a touch more to give the walking man as much safety as I dare! My nearside corner is now within a couple of metres of the man who was right at his vehicle doorway now (I note no door - baker's delivery van). Right alongside now and the van driver, holding both hand rails, swings his body out to hoist himself onto his seat.

Thump!! Two passengers sitting abreast of me turn to me as one, aghast! One says "I think you hit him"!! At the same instant I'm looking in my nearside mirror as we hurtle past and can't believe my eyes! The man is still on his feet, but spinning - not thrown down or over his van, but spinning! Just then there's space for me to pull into the kerb. I switch off, jump up and tell the passengers there's been an accident and to please stay in the coach as the road is very dangerous. I run back to where the van driver is being attended to by some people from a local shop. They'd helped him to one of their cars where the man was sitting with the door open.

Apart from an obviously extremely sore upper arm and shoulder he appeared OK, but refused to be taken to a doctor, hospital, or police. I said "Well, we should at least exchange license details". So with everybody on edge and upset, we exchanged license documents (not a card - the old system) but kept talking and looking at each other. I made a note of his license number and address and looked at the name. I said, as in a dream, this is my license - where's yours? (or did he say that? - I forget.) He said "No, this is my license". Puzzled, we put the documents together and studied them. We were looking at the same name! Edwin James Pike!! To say we were stunned would be an understatement! Would anybody care to calculate the odds? Odds against similar surnames; odds against identical spelling of the surname; odds against identical first name; odds for two identical first names - and in the same sequence! (At that time Sydney had a population of about 3.5 million with a huge floating contingent of country, interstate and overseas visitors.)

And a footnote here...I believe to this day that the Duple bubble shaped coach body probably saved his life. If I had been driving a conventional square bodied coach, the impact may well have killed him. As it was, the curvature of the Duple corner created a glancing blow where some of the inertia pushed him aside, allowing him to escape the full force.

There is a sequel (if all this has a meaning, then what on earth is it??)

About two years later, I had been visiting a bus proprietor friend in a neighbouring suburb. About midnight, or later, I was on my way home and travelling a deserted highway through a shopping centre, when I realised I had left something behind. As I did a quick U-turn, I noticed a police van about 300 metres away in the direction that I had been travelling. Immediately I realised what my U-turn must have looked like to the police and especially at that time of night. Sure enough! they were alongside me in short order.

"Why did you do a U-turn when you saw us"? "I was turning before I saw you". Then the usual license check by radio. While this was happening I thought "Well, I'm only about 2-3 kms from Russell's place, I'll take these blokes there for a positive character reference check, if needs be" - but then an officer came back from their car and said "You're on our wanted list"! In a flash the experience with my namesake came back to me and it was obvious now why he hadn't wanted medical attention (fear of records) or police involvement!! So, insisting that I was who I said I was (business names etc.), I invited them back to Russ's (whom they knew). No lights on at his place and I was NOT going to wake the household. The cops said "Look, we have to check further" I said "Well do it, I'm going home". They argued further and I said "Are you arresting me"? they said "No" (they couldn't - I'd given them too much detail for my case), but would I please come to the Station. So I agreed and all was cleared up to their satisfaction, but not without a protest letter from me, later, re no apology.

Much later an amusing incident followed with a visiting police captain endeavouring to appease. (Left his cap on my desk, and other - but a real gentleman, actually). 'nuf said.

Francis Joseph Bailey was born on September 9th 1897 in Streatham, London. His father, Joseph Mallinson Bailey, originally from Lichfield in Staffordshire, worked as a clerk at the Admiralty and his mother, Margaret Elizabeth (nee Hooley) from Woolwich in Kent, had been a teacher. Francis also had a sister, Katherine Mabel, born in 1900. By 1911 the family was living in Gosport where Joseph held the position of Deputy Victualling Store Officer for the Admiralty. When Francis began his long and distinguished flying career the family had moved to Lewisham Park, London.

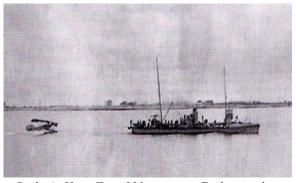

Bailey entered the RNAS as a probationary Flight Sub-Lieutenant on November 12th 1914, and learned to fly at Eastbourne, Hendon, and the Central Flying School at Upavon in Wiltshire. He qualified for his aviator's license at Hendon in a Bristol box-kite on April 12th 1915. After further training he qualified as a pilot and was posted to Calshot. His rank and seniority were confirmed on July 14th 1915.

On March 19th 1916, six German aircraft made a daylight attack on Dover, Deal and Ramsgate killing 14 and injuring 26. They were identified as four Friedrichafen FF33 versions B to F, one Hansa- Brandenburg NW and one Gotha Ursinus WD. Flight Sub-Lt F J Bailey and his Observer, Air Mechanic Smith, operating out of Dover in Short Admiralty Type 830 Tractor Biplane No. 1335, were among the RNAS forces sent to repel them.

On April 24th 1916, having returned to the UK after a brief and, according to his confidential record, highly unsatisfactory appointment on the seaplane carrier HMS Empress, Sub-Lt Bailey was Mentioned-In-Despatches for an attack on two enemy destroyers while under heavy fire. He was promoted to Lieutenant on 30th June of that year.

On 24th July, a few weeks before his 19th birthday, while based at the Dunkirk Seaplane Station, Bailey and his observer Lt. Frederick W Mardock (RNVR), were ordered to patrol the coastal region north-east of Dunkirk in Short Type 830 No. 819. They were a few miles north of Zeebrugge when they sighted and attacked an enemy submarine UC10. Machinegun fire fractured their engine induction pipe and they were forced down. Bailey later claimed that they continued the fight from the surface and killed and injured some of the German crew, but no casualties were listed in the war diary of the Marinekorps Flandern which described the incident. The Short 830 was approached by Freidrichschafen F33H seaplane No. 639, and the crew used their machinegun to force the RNAS officers to surrender. They were picked up, apparently unharmed, by German torpedo boat A14 and taken, with their aircraft in tow, to Zeebrugge.

Together they were held as prisoners-of-war, initially at Clausthal and later at Holzminden, located some 30 miles southwest of Hildesheim. Of the 180 or so German PoW camps then in existence, those were two of the most notorious. Twin brothers Heinrich and Karl Neimeyer, who had lived for many years in Milwaukee and had left with the German Embassy staff when the USA declared war, were appointed Commandants of the two camps, with Karl in charge of arguably the worst of them - Holzminden. The regime was brutal, operating with scant regard for the Hague Rules then governing the conduct of war.

Lt. Mardock was among the 29 British officers who made a daring escape from Holzminden in July 1918, having spent about nine months tunnelling under the wire. Unfortunately he was one of the 19 recaptured. The prison barrack blocks have survived and are now used by the German army.

On June 13th 1918, nearly two years after his capture, Lt F J Bailey was transferred from Germany to Holland which had remained neutral during WW1. The move was associated with a prisoner exchange program; selected prisoners who agreed not to escape and were prepared to sign a declaration to that effect, were permitted to live with considerable freedom in neutral cities, often in private homes, in preparation for exchange and repatriation. Some officers arranged for their wives to join them and others were permitted home leave in England if they agreed to return!

Bailey took full advantage of the situation. He had become acquainted with a 19 year old Dutch girl, Margareth van den Ham van Heijst, and married her in The Hague on November 26th 1918, just 15 days after the war officially ended.

Kaseme barracks 'B' Holzminden PoW camp with prisoners and guards

Later Bailey recalled that before he returned to England, the Inter-Allied Commission gave him command of a paddle steamer and, with the aid of a platoon of Marines and a band, he was ordered to patrol the river Rhine, collect PoWs from the German PoW camps and transport them to Rotterdam for repatriation. This was a challenging assignment as Bailey's team was operating independently in territory that was still hostile - in some areas the enemy forces were unaware that the war had ended! At each camp a brief ceremony was held during which the Camp Commandant and the Mayor of the village were made to stand to attention while the Marine Band played the British National Anthem.

Lt. F J Bailey returned to the UK on January 22nd 1919. He declined a permanent commission and, with six other ex-RNAS/RAF pilots, accepted an offer from the Supermarine Aviation Works Ltd., to fly four-seater flying boats built from original designs produced for the Air Department of the Admiralty. The company, located on the river Itchen at Woolston, Southampton, was converting 10 of these 'AD' machines to provide short distance services e.g. Southampton to the Isle of Wight (IOW), for civilian passengers. The modified machines were given the type name 'Channel' and services were later extended to the Channel Islands and France.

On October 5th 1919, Bailey and colleague Henri Biard were preparing to return to Southampton from France in two Channel boats. They had no passengers and decided to make of race of it. During the flight Bailey's aircraft, G-EAEE, suffered a failure and crashed into the sea off the IOW. The aircraft was wrecked, but Bailey received nothing more than a few scratches and was rescued by the crew of a fishing boat. Biard was to become well-known as a Supermarine test pilot and famously won the Schneider Trophy in 1922. To be continued...

A whopping-big feral pig has been nabbed not far from a homestead in far west New South Wales.

The enormous boar was found foraging in thick bushland, on a large outback property, 175 kilometres north of Broken Hill.

Grazier Paul Mannion from Nundora Station says he is glad he did not come across it alone.

"I'm no hero when it comes to them," he said. "It would raise a sweat to my face if I found myself eyeballing it."

But thanks to some hunting help, the giant pest was soon tracked down.

"We had pig hunters come up from Melbourne and they came across him in very thick scrub, seven kilometres from the family home," Mr Mannion said.

"This pig's probably about 120 to 130 kilograms and maybe seven or eight years old. Usually they lose their tusks by the time they get that big." Mr Mannion says it is not the first time he has seen wild boars on his property.

"We get hunters up about once a month as feral pigs are a big problem," he said. "These blokes play a big part in keeping numbers down. They [feral pigs] have a big impact on lambing in particular, because they just take the little lambs. When it's really dry, they'll kill full-grown sheep."

Mr Mannion says he would not be surprised if there is a bigger pest lurking somewhere at the station.

"It's surprising how the pigs are getting bigger and bigger," he said.

"They get shot, but they keep coming, they must be coming from somewhere."

Book Review

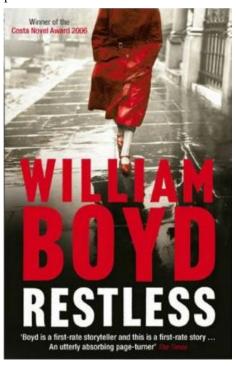

This month the Mt Elephant and Beyond Book Group met to discuss Restless, a thriller by Ghanaian-born British writer, William Boyd. A dramatised version of the novel was screened on SBS earlier this year.

In 1976 Ruth Gilmartin is a young woman living in Oxford, working half-heartedly on a Ph D thesis and tutoring English language students. She has a five-year-old son, Jochen, from a failed relationship with a German radical academic. She is close to her mother, Sally, who lives in an isolated Cotswolds village. Sally has always been a bit odd - even Jochen thinks his grandmother is strange - but since her husband's death six years earlier she seems to have become quite paranoid. As Ruth becomes concerned that her mother is suffering delusions, Sally decides it is time to explain herself and hands over a manuscript 'The story of Eva Delectorskaya.' When Ruth asks what it is about, Sally replies 'Me ... I am Eva Delectorskaya.'

The narrative alternates between Ruth's life in the 1970s, told in the first person, and Sally/Eva's life during World War II, told in the third person. This treatment of Eva's story is not quite convincing as it reads more like a novel than the memoir it is supposed to be and the use of the third person serves to distance Sally from Eva, as if she was writing about another person instead of herself. However, it is a compelling story.

In 1939, Eva discovers that her brother Kolia was murdered while working for Lucas Romer of the British intelligence service. Romer recruits Eva with the help of Eva's father, convincing her that she will be doing it for Kolia. Eva is given a new identity and after a period of training she goes to work in Romer's section, the AAS. This is a press agency that disseminates false information both to mislead the Nazis about British military power and to shape American opinion in order to persuade the United States to enter the war. Eva is also involved in a number of covert and dangerous operations. When things start to go wrong, it becomes clear that someone is playing a double game. Members of the team in the US are being set up and murdered. Eva fears she will be next and flees first to Canada and then to England, adopting new identities along the way to cover her tracks. In London she assumes the name of a young woman killed in the blitz but she must do more to establish her new identity. She looks out for a suitable husband, and marries Sean Gilmartin.

The book prompts the question – is anyone really who we think they are? Ruth is stunned by her mother's story and at first she doesn't believe it. So much of what she thought she knew about her mother is untrue: 'everything I'd blithely taken for granted all my life gone in a second.' Ironically at the same time that Ruth is reading about her mother's extraordinary life as a spy, she is teaching her students English from Life with the Ambersons, the story of a bland and boring 'normal' family.

The reader meets many of the people that inhabit Ruth's world, her ex-lover's brother and his girlfriend, her academic colleagues and several of her students, one of whom, Hamid, falls in love with her. Although some critics have suggested that these characters are mere padding, they do allow Boyd to introduce themes such as 1970s counter-culture and intelligence gathering.

At the start of her spy training, Romer tells Eva that the first rule is to trust no-one, 'not even the one person you think you can trust most in this world. Always suspect. Always mistrust'. She learns that she cannot become close to her colleagues, the most innocent question being viewed with suspicion, and she realises that the life of a spy is essentially a solitary one. Spying also involves a battle of wits and an ability to deal with evolving situations. When Eva has to flee the US, she has to work though her options – what will people be expecting her to do? She has to work through bluff, double bluff, triple bluff, quadruple bluff. Sometimes it all seems a bit of a game, albeit a deadly game.

At the very beginning of the book is a quote from Marcel Proust that expands upon the idea that 'the hour of death is uncertain'. This fear of death haunts Sally Gilmartin – she is convinced that someone is going to kill her because of what happened more than thirty years ago. There is an agenda behind her revelations to Ruth about her past. She is priming Ruth, recruiting her to find and contact Lucas Romer, now a respected member of the peerage. Although Eva/Sally seems to think that her final confrontation with Romer will resolve the issue, it is clear at the end of the novel that it has not. The reader never really knows if there is any basis to her fear or indeed if her contact with Romer will precipitate events.

Some of the characters are not fully developed. Eva's character is not well rounded – she doesn't seem to have much personality and it appears that her training as a spy has had a dehumanising effect. There are many questions about Romer too – what is his motivation? But generally Restless is well written: there is intrigue and suspense in Eva's story and the tension builds as she faces betrayal and pursuit. The novel is gripping and recommended as an enjoyable read.

A Special Christmas Present

John Henry Niebuur (14 June 1926 - 5 November 2011) Part 2

...One day, Jan Hendrik found out countries like Canada and Australia were inviting people to come to start a new life. He thought this would be a good idea, but he was worried that Rita would not want to leave her family and friends. He thought of lots of ways to convince her that it would be a good thing to do. When he finally asked her if she would come with him across the sea to Canada, she just said 'yes'!

When their application was approved, there was not much time before they were due to leave - only three weeks to pack, fill in forms, book their plane tickets and organise their wedding. It was a very busy time.

When their wedding day arrived, Jan Hendrik knew that it had been worth every minute of worrying and waiting. Rita looked so beautiful in her new outfit. She wore a stylish jacket and skirt she made herself with the help of her sisters, and a little hat on her dark hair. Jan Hendrik looked very handsome in a brand new suit.

Then it was time to say goodbye to their many relatives and friends. They felt sad about leaving, but excited and happy too. They were together at last, and about to start a new life in a new land.

Jan Hendrik worked hard in Canada, doing any job he could find to support his new wife. After a while, they had a baby daughter whom they called Hendrika (Rita, or 'Rietje' for short), in honour of Jan Hendrik's foster mother.

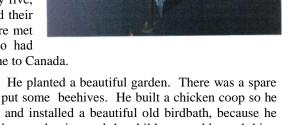

During the next eight years, Jan Hendrik (now known as 'John') and his wife had five more children. They were Edgar (named after Rita's father, Eppo); Mary (named after John's birth mother, Maria); Patricia (named after Rita's mother, Petronella); and two more little girls called Jeanette and Julia (because they were names that John and Rita liked).

In Canada, John planted a beautiful garden. There was a grove of birch trees near the garden, which was a perfect place to put some beehives. He built a chicken coop so he could raise chickens and collect fresh eggs every day. He made birdhouses too, because he loved to watch the birds. When he had some spare time, he would draw and paint, and the children would watch him. They loved to draw and paint, too.

John and Rita loved each other. They prayed together and with their children every day. They were a happy, lively family, even though times were hard and John struggled to earn enough money to feed and educate them. He and Rita told their children about God, and about His Son Jesus, who died and rose from the dead so they could be God's children. They could see that their parents' faith was real, and that God really did help them in every situation.

When Rietje was thirteen years old and Julia, the youngest, was only five, John and Rita decided to move to a new land once more. They sold their house and car, packed, and headed for Australia by plane. They were met in Launceston by John's sister Miep and her husband Roelf, who had emigrated to Australia about the same time that John and Rita had gone to Canada.

John bought a big old house for his wife and family, and fixed it up. He planted a beautiful garden. There was a spare corner in the backyard near the garden, which was a perfect place to put some beehives. He built a chicken coop so he could raise chickens and collect fresh eggs every day. He restored and installed a beautiful old birdbath, because he loved to watch the birds. When he had some spare time, he would draw and paint, and the children would watch him. They still loved to draw and paint, too.

John and Rita lived in the big old house for thirty years. Their children eventually grew up and left home. They married and raised families of their own, and told them about God, and about His Son Jesus. The children could see that their parents' faith was real, and that God really did help them in every situation.

Over the years, the family of eight expanded to more than thirty, and John and Rita became proud Grandpa and Nanna to numerous grandchildren. Every Christmas, and sometimes for birthdays, they all gathered at John and Rita's home. There was always lots of delicious food, lots of talking, and lots of laughter.

After John retired, the big old house was sold. John and Rita bought a comfortable brick house at Legana, where John planted a beautiful garden. He built a chicken coop so he could raise chickens, and collect fresh eggs every day. He found a special place for the old birdbath, because he loved to watch the birds.

When John had some spare time, he would draw and paint. He would also play the organ, because he bought one just for himself and learned how to play it after he retired. Every Christmas, and sometimes for birthdays, the whole family gathered at John and Rita's home. There was always lots of delicious food, lots of talking, and lots of laughter.

Later, Rita became very ill with cancer. John took care of her, and grew flowers to give to her when she had to go to hospital. When she died, John and his family knew that she was in heaven with the God she trusted, and this helped them when they felt sad.

After a while, John decided to sell his house and build a new one near the sea. Once again, he planted a beautiful garden. He bought and repaired an old chicken coop so he could raise chickens and collect fresh eggs every day. He found a special place for the old birdbath, because he loved to watch the birds. When he had some spare time, he would play the organ, the one he bought just for himself and learned how to play after he retired.

John's family came to share Christmas with him in his new home. There was lots of delicious food, lots of talking, and lots of laughter. There was also a surprise for John. Rietje, with a little help from some of her sisters, had made a very special Christmas present. It was given to him after a longer version of this story was read out to him and the whole family. This present had lots of things in its design that told about his life and adventures.

John took this special present with him a few years later when he moved into a retirement village. Whenever he looked at it, it reminded him of all the exciting and happy times he had experienced in his life. It also reminded him of the love of his family, and the love of God which stayed with him through his whole life. What was this special Christmas present?

It was ... Dad's (Grandpa's) Quilt!

A New York teenager has created the world's first "sneaker pawnshop" where streetwise youngsters can hock their valuable trainers to raise cash.

Specialising in high-end designer models and "dead stock" (limited edition trainers no longer being made which can sell for many thousands of dollars), the store is the brainchild of Chase Reed, a 16-year-old from Harlem.

All shoes brought into Sneaker Pawn must pass a smell test before their owners receive a lump sum in cash. They can redeem them later or allow them to be sold. Owners have first refusal on any sale and receive 80% of any profit.

Customers usually borrow around $10 per pair of lightly-worn trainers although one was lent thousands of dollars after bringing in a pair of Nike LeBron Crown Jewels and two pairs of Nike Air Jordans. They must repay the loan at a rate of 20%.

A run-on sentence is one in which two or more independent clauses (i.e. complete sentences) are joined without appropriate punctuation or conjunction, and this is generally considered a stylistic error, though it is occasionally used in literature and may be used as a rhetorical device, and an example of a run-on is a comma splice, in which two independent clauses are joined with a comma without an accompanying co-ordinating conjunction, although some prescriptivists exclude comma splices from the definition of a run-on sentence, but this does not imply that they consider comma splices to be acceptable, and the mere fact that a sentence is too long does not make it a run-on sentence: sentences are run-ons only when they contain more than one independent clause, and a run-on sentence can be as short as four words - for instance: I drive she walks - in this case there are two independent clauses: two subjects paired with two intransitive verbs, so as long as clauses are punctuated appropriately, a writer can assemble multiple independent clauses in a single sentence: in fact, a properly constructed sentence can be extended indefinitely.

SPORTS NEWS

On Monday the June 2nd 2014 the Scamander River Women's Pennant Golf team won the Division Two State Final. What a wonderful achievement for a group of ladies from a small country club. They played against clubs who have dozens of members, whereas Scamander River girls were a team with just eight to choose from.

They won the title by first winning the East Coast Pennant and Teams Day.

This was followed by defeating Mowbray at Riverside for the Cons Pearce trophy, Ulverstone at Devonport for the Watterson Shield, and Ulverstone again at Riverside on Sunday June 1st for the right to play in the State final. Then on Monday June 2nd, still at Riverside, the girls played Hobart team Kingston Beach and won the State title three and a half to one and a half.

Well done girls, you have not only done yourselves and your club proud, but have been great ambassadors for all our east coast golf clubs.

By Jim Haas

Roads go ever ever on
Over rock and under tree
By caves where never sun has shone
By streams that never find the sea.
Over snow by winter sown
And through the merry flowers of June
Over grass and over stone
And under mountains in the moon.

Roads go ever ever on
Under cloud and under star
Yet feet that wandering have gone
Turn at last to home afar.
Eyes that fire and sword have seen
And horror in the halls of powers have been

Look at last on meadows green
And trees and hills we long have known.

So finally our feet get us to the Warmth of the fire and safety of home Where we can dream of dreams once more.

Golf is a good walk spoiled. Mark Twain

A British treasure hunter stumbled on a $37,000 Bronze Age golden necklet during his smoko.

After a frustrating morning scouring the Dorset country side with his metal detector, finding nothing but junk, David Spohr decided to take a break. Sitting down to eat his lunch, the 55-year-old's discarded metal detector suddenly went off. At first he thought the muddy mess he found was just a squashed sardine tin, then came the glint of gold. "You dream of something like this - it was the find of a lifetime." In his fingers emerged the form of a Bronze Age lunula - a solid gold necklet in the shape of a crescent moon. It is believed to be anywhere between 2500 and 4500 years old. Finely engraved with zigzag and striped patterns, it is one of only three of its style ever found in Britain and has been valued at up to $37,000. The object will be examined by government archaeologists before being declared a treasure. Proceeds will be split between the land owner and Mr Spohr. He never did get to eat his sandwiches.

Rump Steak with Creamy Mushroom Sauce

4 x 125g rump steaks
750g sweet potatoes, washed and cut into wedges
4 tablespoons organic olive oil
Freshly ground black pepper
75g butter
2 tablespoons olive oil
1 onion, peeled and finely chopped

1 garlic clove, crushed
150g baby button mushrooms, wiped and sliced
200g chestnut mushrooms, wiped and sliced
300g tub beef stock
1-2 tablespoons brandy
500g pot low fat natural yogurt

Preheat the oven to 220°C, fan 200°C, 425°F. Place the sweet potato wedges into a roasting tin, drizzle with olive oil and season. Place in the oven and cook for 35-40 minutes or until crispy.

For the mushroom sauce: Place the butter and oil in a large frying pan and heat, add the onion and garlic and sauté for 2-3 minutes, then add the mushrooms and sauté for a further 5-8 minutes.

In the meantime place the stock and brandy in a saucepan and reduce by half. Remove half the mushrooms from the frying pan, place in a food processor with the stock and process until smooth, finally add the yogurt and process once again.

Return this mixture to the pan with the reserved mushrooms. Preheat a grill or griddle pan and cook the steaks for $2-2\frac{1}{2}$ minutes on each side for medium rare, $2\frac{1}{2}-3$ minutes for medium and $3-3\frac{1}{2}$ for well done.
